CLIMBED TWELVES STORIES.

Roundt Broker Gastrin's Forced Trip Down a Fire-Escape.

Broker Jules M. Gastrin is no worse to-day for his experience in descending by way of the fire-escape from his office on the top floor of 125 Broadway to the street last night, an experience resulting from his falling asleep on his own couch and failing to awake until after the janitor had closed the building for the night.

The bullet missed its mark, and passing through an open window struck Josiah W. Richmond, who was seated at a table in the dining-room, inflicting a wound in the neck. A second shot wounded a girl, probably a family attendant. The broker is a Frenchman. Ordinarily he speaks English with the fluency of the average New Yorker.

The bullet was not an easy one for a man of Mr. Gastrin's round physique, and his act attracted a large crowd of spectators. The broker is a Frenchman.

Ordinarily he speaks English with the fluency of the average New Yorker.

But when he awoke at 7:30 o'clock, stumbled down the twelve flights of stairs only to find the street door securely bolted and barred, climbed back to his own office and from there down the fire-escape, he forgot all the English he ever knew, and, failing to discover the foot of the fire-escape, was still thirty feet from terra firma, he could shout for help only in his native tongue.

François Dakin and Aufwirth happened along, and, though they didn't understand French, they did appreciate that the round robin like a Gastrin was not to be trifled with.

At length, however, they overcame their fear by ordering a梯子 for each member, the committee having a big stock of tickets the committee had with them.

Next Sunday Clear-Makers' Union No. 10 will meet to consider the matter. The members have been recommended by the Executive Board to all parties, to be held for the purpose of dedicating the new hall of the N.Y. section. An invitation to speak is given to all other laborers.
